Long years ago there dwelt in an old city upon the banks of the Rhine a jeweler named Rudolph von Elsenheim.

Gone—gone—the wonder of the world has gone forever!" and he cast himself down upon the floor and wept in bitterness of soul for the loss of his precious

Meanwhile, Wilhelmena, broken hearted and in a woeful bodily pain, crept out of his sight. That night she grew very ill, and the dawn of day saw her lying dead upon her pillow, and upon her bosom a little babe that had wailed but once before

As he looked upon her all Rudolph's grief for the loss of his diamond became as though it had never been. His grief was all fer Wilhelmena now. His remorse was terrible. He knew himself to be the murderer of the wife who had loved him and whom he now once more loved as in the days when first he met her.

From that day Rudolph was a changed man, moody and miserable—a man who never smiled or spoke to any one when he could avoid it-madder than ever, men said, for still he sought for jewels which seemed to disappear as fast as he became their possessor

He was greedy for patronage, and pleased the great folk as well as ever and charged No common worker in gold and gems them more for his taste and judgment and was he. New Zealand's Mutton Trade.

Up to 1881 the sheep masters did not know what on earth to do with their mutton, but the discovery was then made that ain. Great was the alarm among the classes, from dukes to butchers, who con trolled the British meat market. prejudices were stirred up against frozen meat, and as at first some of the mutton was discolored there was ground for prejudice. But the New Zealanders got bold of the scientific truth that intense cold can be produced in a chamber with walls impervious to heat through the simple process of compressing air by steam power and then letting it into the chamber, where it expands to its natural bulk.

They gradually perfected their machinery and plant, established freezing works near the ports of shipment, and sent the frozen carcasses, nicely encased in clean bags, to There they keep hard as marble and perfeetly sweet for mouths, and, for anght I know to the contrary, could be kept for years. Why Southerners Excel in Horsemanship It will be accepted as a truism that the man or people that does any given thing the most constantly will be apt to excel in that one thing. Apply this to the riding of the southerners. Now the climate and soil, the thicker population, and more industrious habits of the eastern and middle northern farmer goes to the nearest town he drives because the roads are good, and he can carry his stuff to better advantage; the southerner rides because the roads for a great part of the year are impassable to wheels. This breeds the universal habit of horseback work.
